ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Grateful appreciation is expressed to the teachers, school administrators, and college registrars who have submitted much of the information included in this report, and to Miss Nora Grissom, Mr. Carroll D. Donlavy, and Mr. James D. Crawford who supplied data concerning educational activities of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Without their cooperation and assistance, this comprehensive report would not have been possible.

HIGHER EDUCATION

Education personnel of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the State Supervisor of Indian Education, Department of Public Instruction, have cooperated in advising high school guidance departments and high school students of the various financial aids available to Indians for education and/or training beyond the high school.

In addition, the Department of Public Instruction and the Bureau of Indian Affairs have developed a program of visitation to the various units of the University in which Indian students are enrolled. The aim of this program is to provide an off-campus listening ear which may help the student adjust to college life and prevent an early termination of his college education.

BLACKFEET INDIAN RESERVATION

The Blackfeet Indian Reservation is located in northwestern Montana, just east of Glacier National Park. It is one of our larger reservations, with boundaries stretching into both Glacier and Pondera Counties.

The Blackfeet people are a confederation of tribes consisting of Blackfeet, Bloods, and Piegans. Bureau of Indian Affairs' figures show that there are close to 12,000 enrolled members of this tribe; of these, more than one-half live on the reservation.

Children from this reservation generally attend public schools near their homes. There are some children who, due to isolation or adverse social conditions, are sent to off-reservation boarding schools or to a modern boarding facility maintained by the Bureau of Indian Affairs about six miles north of Browning; these children are transported to Browning Public Schools for formal education.

Financial support to the public schools, other than local or state funds, comes from the United States Office of Education under the authority of Public Law 874. Some Johnson O'Malley funds have been allocated to certain schools of this reservation in support of school lunch programs.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs maintains a staff member in education who works closely with the public schools and the parents in an attempt to bring greater cooperation and understanding.

CROW INDIAN RESERVATION

The reservation of the Crows is located southeast of the city of Billings. The reservation provides a home for approximately 3,200 Crows and another 1,400 or so living off-reservation. Lands of this reservation extend into Big Horn and Yellowstone Counties.

Many Crows have taken up temporary or permanent residence in the city of Billings and, of course, the children of these families attend the Billings schools. Reservation children receive their formal education in public schools, mission schools, and off-reservation boarding schools operated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The Crow language is still used rather extensively, which does create language problems in teaching, and in the use of English in the schools.

The Tribe has received sizable sums of money, both from lands used for the construction of Yellowtail Dam and from favorable judgments of the Indian Claims Commission. These funds are spent by the individual tribe members on approved family plans. This planning has affected education in that many new houses have been built which has improved the environment. In addition, monies have been used directly for educational purposes.

An education committee of tribal government has been active in assisting Crow youth in educational activities. This includes screening applicants for the tribal scholarships.

The problem of availability of high schools for children on the western edge of the reservation is partially solved by some children attending high school in Edgar, which is located off the reservation.

The operating budgets for all public schools within the reservation are supported by funds from the United States Office of Education authorized under Public Law 874.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs does not maintain educational facilities on this reservation; however, it does have a staff member in education who works closely with the public schools and the parents in an attempt to bring about greater cooperation and understanding.

FLATHEAD INDIAN RESERVATION

The Flathead Indian Reservation is Montana's only reservation located west of the Continental Divide. This reservation encompasses lands in Lake, Sanders, and Missoula Counties.

The Flathead people are a confederation of Salish and Kootenai Tribes; however, there has been a high degree of integration with non-Indians on this reservation, which has caused a considerable thinning of the blood. Bureau of Indian Affairs' population estimates show a total enrollment of 5,248, with approximately one-half living off-reservation.

Flathead children receive their formal education in public, mission, and federal off-reservation boarding schools.

Federal financial assistance for public schools on this reservation comes primarily under the authority of Public Law 874. This assistance, however, is not too extensive due to the taxes derived from improvements on federal property, the greatest of which is Kerr Dam, located near the city of Polson. Some Johnson O'Malley funds are allocated to public schools on this reservation for special services.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs does not maintain educational facilities on this reservation; however, it does have a staff member in education who works closely with the public schools and the parents in an attempt to bring about greater cooperation and understanding.

FORT BELKNAP INDIAN RESERVATION

The Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, located in northcentral Montana, is the home of approximately 1,600 Gros Ventre and Assiniboine people. There is also a small number of Chippewa and Cree who have no tribal assets but live on this reservation. Most of the people live in the valley of the Milk River and at the northern foot of the Little Rocky Mountains.

Education for Fort Belknap children is provided by public schools on or near the reservation, one mission school at the southern end of the reservation, and off-reservation boarding schools maintained by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. St. Paul's Mission at Hays operates the only high school on the reservation.

Public schools on or near this reservation have received considerable financial support from the United States Office of Education under the authority of Public Law 874. Some Johnson O'Malley monies have been used in support of special services provided children of this reservation.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs does not maintain educational facilities on this reservation; however, it does have a staff member in education who works closely with the public schools and the parents in an attempt to bring about greater cooperation and understanding.

FORT PECK INDIAN RESERVATION

The Fort Peck Indian Reservation is situated in northeastern Montana. This reservation is the home of about 4,000 Indians who belong to two distinct tribal groups, the Sioux and Assiniboine. Most of the Indian people live along the north bank of the Missouri River, which bounds the reservation on the south. The Sioux live toward the east and the Assiniboine toward the west.

Indian children receive their formal education in public, parochial, and off-reservation boarding schools. Records indicate that children from this reservation have attended public schools since 1935, which has resulted in considerable integration in the communities.

Federal financial support to public schools is in the form of Public Law 874 funds; however, revenues derived from improvements on federal property have in some cases been large enough to completely cancel payments under this program. Johnson O'Malley supplemental aid has been used in the support of school lunches served free to indigent Indian pupils.

NORTHERN CHEYENNE INDIAN RESERVATION

The Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation is a small reservation created by executive order to provide a home for the Cheyenne Indians who refused to stay in Oklahoma. Bureau of Indian Affairs' figures show that there are approximately 2,000 Northern Cheyennes who make their home on this reservation.

Northern Cheyenne children secure their education in public schools on or off the reservation, in a mission school just off the reservation, and in Bureau of Indian Affairs' day and boarding schools on or off the reservation.

Federal support of public schools has been in the nature of reimbursement from the United States Office of Education under the authority of Public Law 874. There have been no Johnson O'Malley funds channeled to the schools of this reservation for several years.

ROCKY BOY'S INDIAN RESERVATION

The Rocky Boy's Reservation is a small reservation situated about twenty-five miles south of Havre. This reservation was established by executive order to provide a home for a group of homeless Chippewa and Cree Indians. It is estimated there are 878 people of Chippewa-Cree extraction who live on this reservation.

The children of this reservation are educated in public schools on or off the reservation. The Havre public school system has assumed the responsibility for the education of the children who come from this reservation, and maintain an elementary school in the community near the Rocky Boy's Agency. Some of the children, however, choose to attend the public schools at Box Elder. A program designed to meet some remedial needs has been conducted at the Rocky Boy's School for the last two summers.

The Office of Education plays an important part in the financial support of the school systems on or off this reservation. Johnson O'Malley funds are used to supplement local revenue for special services rendered to Indian children.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs maintains a staff member in education who works closely with the public schools and the parents in an attempt to bring greater cooperation and understanding.

Comments Concerning Indian Education

As gleaned from narrative reports of educators concerned directly with the education of Indian children, the following factors stand out as those affecting good education:

1. Lack of school attendance
2. Law breaking
3. Lack of concern for the property of others
4. Late enrollments
5. Severe retardation in the use of English
6. Deprivation of early enrichment experiences
7. Lack of competitive spirit
8. Parental apathy
9. Need for closer communication between home and school
10. High degree of permissiveness on the part of parents
